States Government

State governments in the United States have various joint venture partnerships that aim at caring for people with a form of addiction. For example, the Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grant (SABG), which is administered by the Center for Substance Abuse Prevention (CSAP) in the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), enables state governments to provide substance abuse treatment, recovery support services as well as substance abuse prevention programs.

Like many states, Michigan uses part of this fund to facilitate initiatives for youths, women, and other vulnerable groups. The program for youths is known as the Michigan Youth Treatment Infrastructure Enhancement Initiatives Grant (MYTIE), while the program for women is called the Women's Specialty Services (WSS). Also, the Medicaid program of most states has some health insurance coverage for these vulnerable groups in the population.

Federal Sources

The Federal Government has several programs that can help people who have challenges with a form of addiction, such as drug or alcohol addiction. These programs are often implemented in partnership with several entities. They include:

- SAMHSA Grant for public and non-profit organizations
- Scholarship During Alcohol/Drug Recovery
- Federal Medicare
- United States Department of Veteran Affairs
- The Affordable Care Act

Private Foundations and Non-Profit Organizations

Just like the Federal Government and States Governments, several private foundations, charities, and non-profit organizations have reserved funds for people who plan to undergo addiction treatment or are currently undergoing addiction treatment. These organizations include:

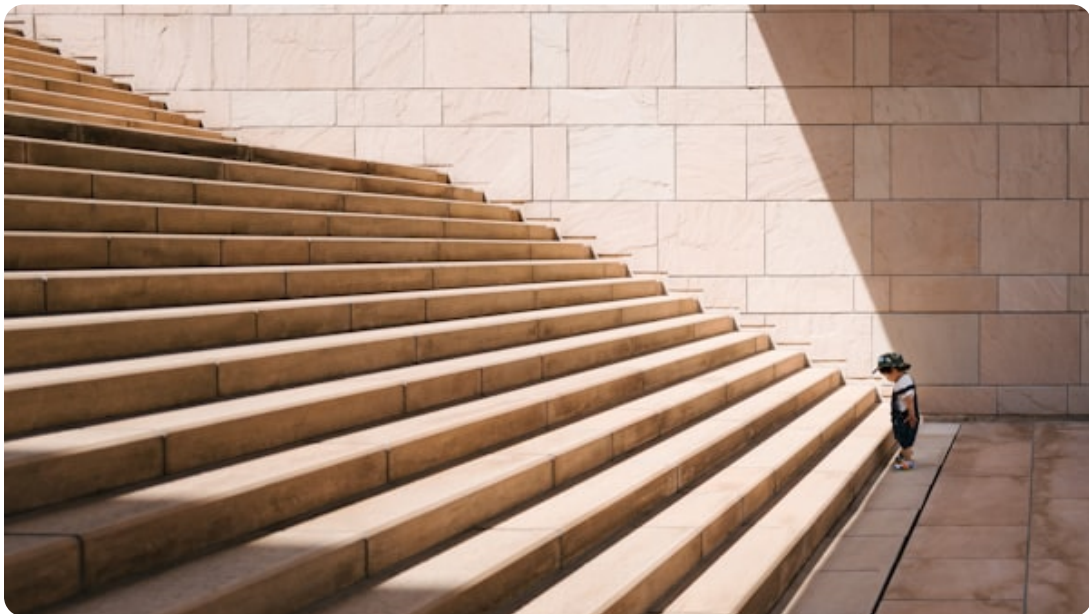

- AMAC Foundation
- LendEDU Foundation
- The Foundation for Alcoholism Research
- To Write Love on Her Arms
- Shatterproof
- Helping Others Live Sober
- Mental Health America
- 100Pedals
